EUROPE TODAY:
TRANSNATIONALISM, GLOBALISMS, AND GEOGRAPHIES OF PAN-EUROPE

Dr. John Pickles (jpickles@unc.edu)
Department of Geography and the Curriculum for International and Area Studies
Spring 2003. Monday 3.00-5.50pm. Dey 204

This course is an upper division undergraduate and graduate course. It will be taught in Spring 2003 as a seminar enrolling senior undergraduate and graduate students. The course will be readings-based, organized around key texts and topical/thematic foci. Throughout the semester, regional and national case studies will be integrated into readings, discussions, and exercises. Students will work closely with primary texts (speeches, pamphlets, Marshall Plan, Cold War documents, Warsaw Pact documents, EU chapters of accession, etc.), original trade and production data, and government and non-government agencies dealing with social issues of various kinds.

2. Zlata Filipovic. Zlata's Diary: A Child's Life in Sarajevo. Penguin, 1994.

COURSE GOALS AND REQUIREMENTS

In this course we will focus much of our attention on what geopolitical changes in Central and Eastern Europe, post-colonial immigration, and economic globalization mean for our understanding of Europe Today. In particular, we will focus on a select number of themes that illustrate important aspects of the changing geographies and geopolitics of Europe, particularly as these relate to the complex spatialities and regionalizations we variously designate as 'Europe'. We will investigate several historical geographies of Europe that have sought to domesticate and control these spatial and social heterogeneities, and we will investigate the new regional configurations emerging during the twentieth century and in the early years of this century. We will engage with post-colonial writings on Europe, ideas about the local and global, geopolitical relations of 'Central Europe/Mitteleuropa', the national state and national identity, regional interconnectedness, and emerging patterns of pan-European integration

Class time will be divided between short lectures that contextualize the readings, exercises and quizzes, and discussion of selected readings. Videos and films will be integrated into class times wherever possible, and arranged outside of class time when necessary.

Students will carry out weekly readings and report-backs, write short response papers, and take several short quizzes. There will also be two group projects to be presented in class.

Grading and Requirements:

Attendance at all classes is required, as is participation in reading, discussion, and presentation.

Four short quizzes on geographical locations will be given during the semester. These will variously test students' knowledge of places, features, and regional organizations.

Students will each write four 3-4 page response/research papers selected from each of the main categories of the syllabus.

Finally, students will participate in two short group projects and report back to class on their findings.
